Certified trainers led seminars. The sessions were in Athens and Sparta's remote villages.

The goal was to train people. Training focused on first aid and AED use.

The young people who learned passed on their knowledge to their circles

We implemented a digital AED map. The map showed all AED locations in the villages.

Easy Access

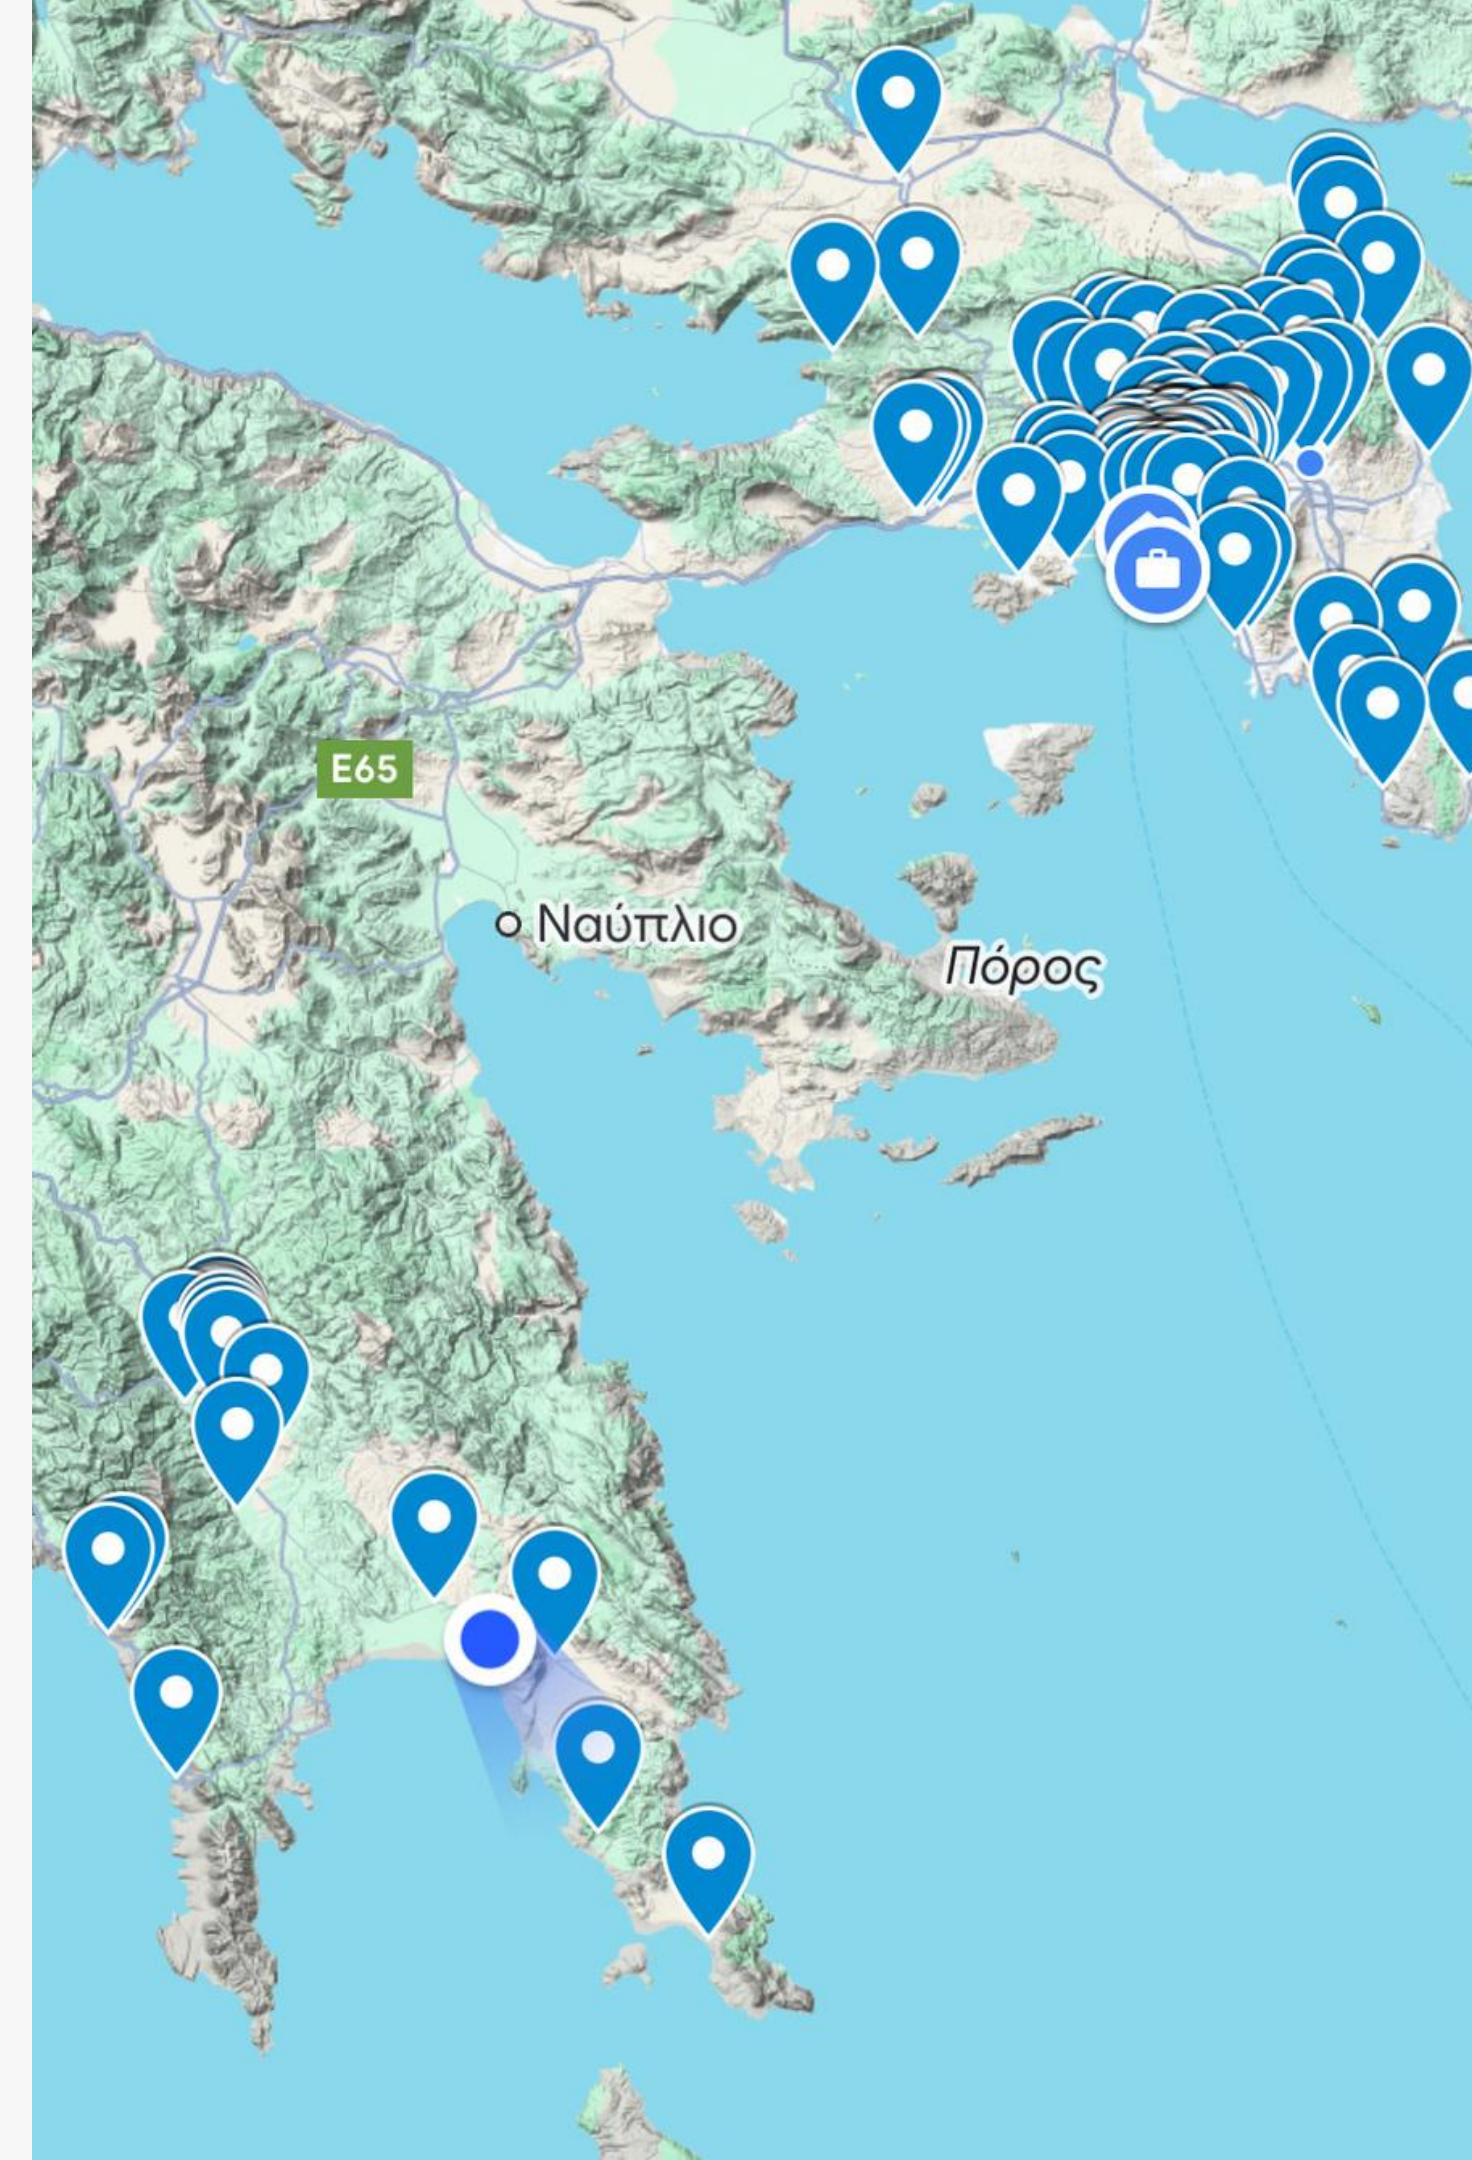

Villagers found AEDs quickly. This improved response times during emergencies.

Real-time Updates

The map updated as AEDs moved. This ensured accurate location data.

Related Videos and Informations

Informational Videos

We produced educational videos. These videos explained how to use AED devices.

Digital Posters

Digital posters displayed QR codes. These codes linked to further resources.

Social Sharing

Information was spread. We used various social media platforms to share.

Challenges and prospective conclusions

In remote areas communities are hungry for knowledge opportunities

It's hard to convince someone that they need some specific knowledge/skills if they haven't had to use it before.

In big cities where things are impersonal, societies are not bound together to care for their fellow man.

Conclusion

Be Prepared

Skills Save Lives

Community Strength

The European Solidarity Corps, through projects like “Do, don't look,” strengthens not just our willingness, but our capability to effectively provide help and solidarity to those who need it most.
